the following steps: (1) identify the problem; (2) determine the cause of the problem; (3) develop a solution; (4) implement the solution; and (5) evaluate the results. The first step is to identify the problem. This can be done by asking the following questions: What is the problem? How long has it been going on? How many people are affected by the problem? The second step is to determine the cause of the problem. This can be done by asking the following questions: What are the possible causes of the problem? Which cause is most likely? The third step is to develop a solution. This can be done by asking the following questions: What are the possible solutions to the problem? Which solution is most likely to be successful? The fourth step is to implement the solution. This can be done by asking the following questions: What are the steps involved in implementing the solution? Who is responsible for implementing the solution? The fifth step is to evaluate the results. This can be done by asking the following questions: How well did the solution work? What were the results of the solution? What lessons can be learned from the experience?

Can it mean as much as the Playboy girls who pose for Playboy, that that is their right not just to pose in their own right, but to pose in their own right as well?
